Specialities:

Gear:

Summary: (machine translated)
Alpine canyon in an enviable environment to perform in summer because it remains snow / ice for much of the spring. It is quite open so we will have many possibilities of escape.
Access by car, if it is not 4×4 may not be possible, depending on whether or not they fix the track.

Hydrology: (machine translated)
In several places

Access: (machine translated)
There are several ways to get to Salardú.
From the Val d'Aran by the N230, or from France by the N125 to Vielha and go up to the Bonaigua.
From the Sort side crossing the Port de la Bonaigua.
Once in Salardú turn towards Bagergue. We will arrive at this pretty village, cross it and continue along the track next to the river Unhola, when it forks to go to the Borda Lana (left) we will go right along the track of Liat. We will see a dam on our left and the Maupás ravine. We cross it and continue up to the Calhaus Hut where we will park.

Approach: (machine translated)
We will continue along the track until we find the GR, turn right and follow it up to an altitude of about 2200m where there is a small meadow almost flat and the access to the right to the Calhaus river.

Tour: (machine translated)
Alpine, high mountain descent, with great flow in spring due to the thaws and with the suffering of the facilities that this entails.
It does not have very exposed or long rappels but it is complicated in case of high flow. In any case, it is quite open so you can escape at many times.

Return: (machine translated)
Arriving at the Calhaus hut
