Summary: (machine translated)
It is not a canyon as such, but a descent equipped in a climbing area, with incredible views over the Ebro delta. We can access by the via ferrata of Roca Blanca, or by the trail. Caution with the via ferrata since the installation was not a big deal.

Hydrology: (machine translated)
After the first section. In the first 8 rappels it is impossible to

Access: (machine translated)
We have to get to Sant Carles de la Ràpita, on the N340, at km 1068. 1068
If we go southbound there is a small road to the right along the Llop torrent. It is about 2.1 kms to a chain.

Approach: (machine translated)
We will leave by the track on the right and after a few zig-zags we reach a fork, we will return to the right. If we want to do the ferrata we will go to the left along this first path towards the lower part of the girdle. If we continue a few meters along the track comes out another fork with milestones that leads us through a small ridge, leaving the ferrata and the walls on the left. After overcoming the wall joins the path of the ferrata and continues towards the Torreta de Montsia.
When we reach the turret, we will continue along the ridge to the north for half a kilometer until we reach the installation.

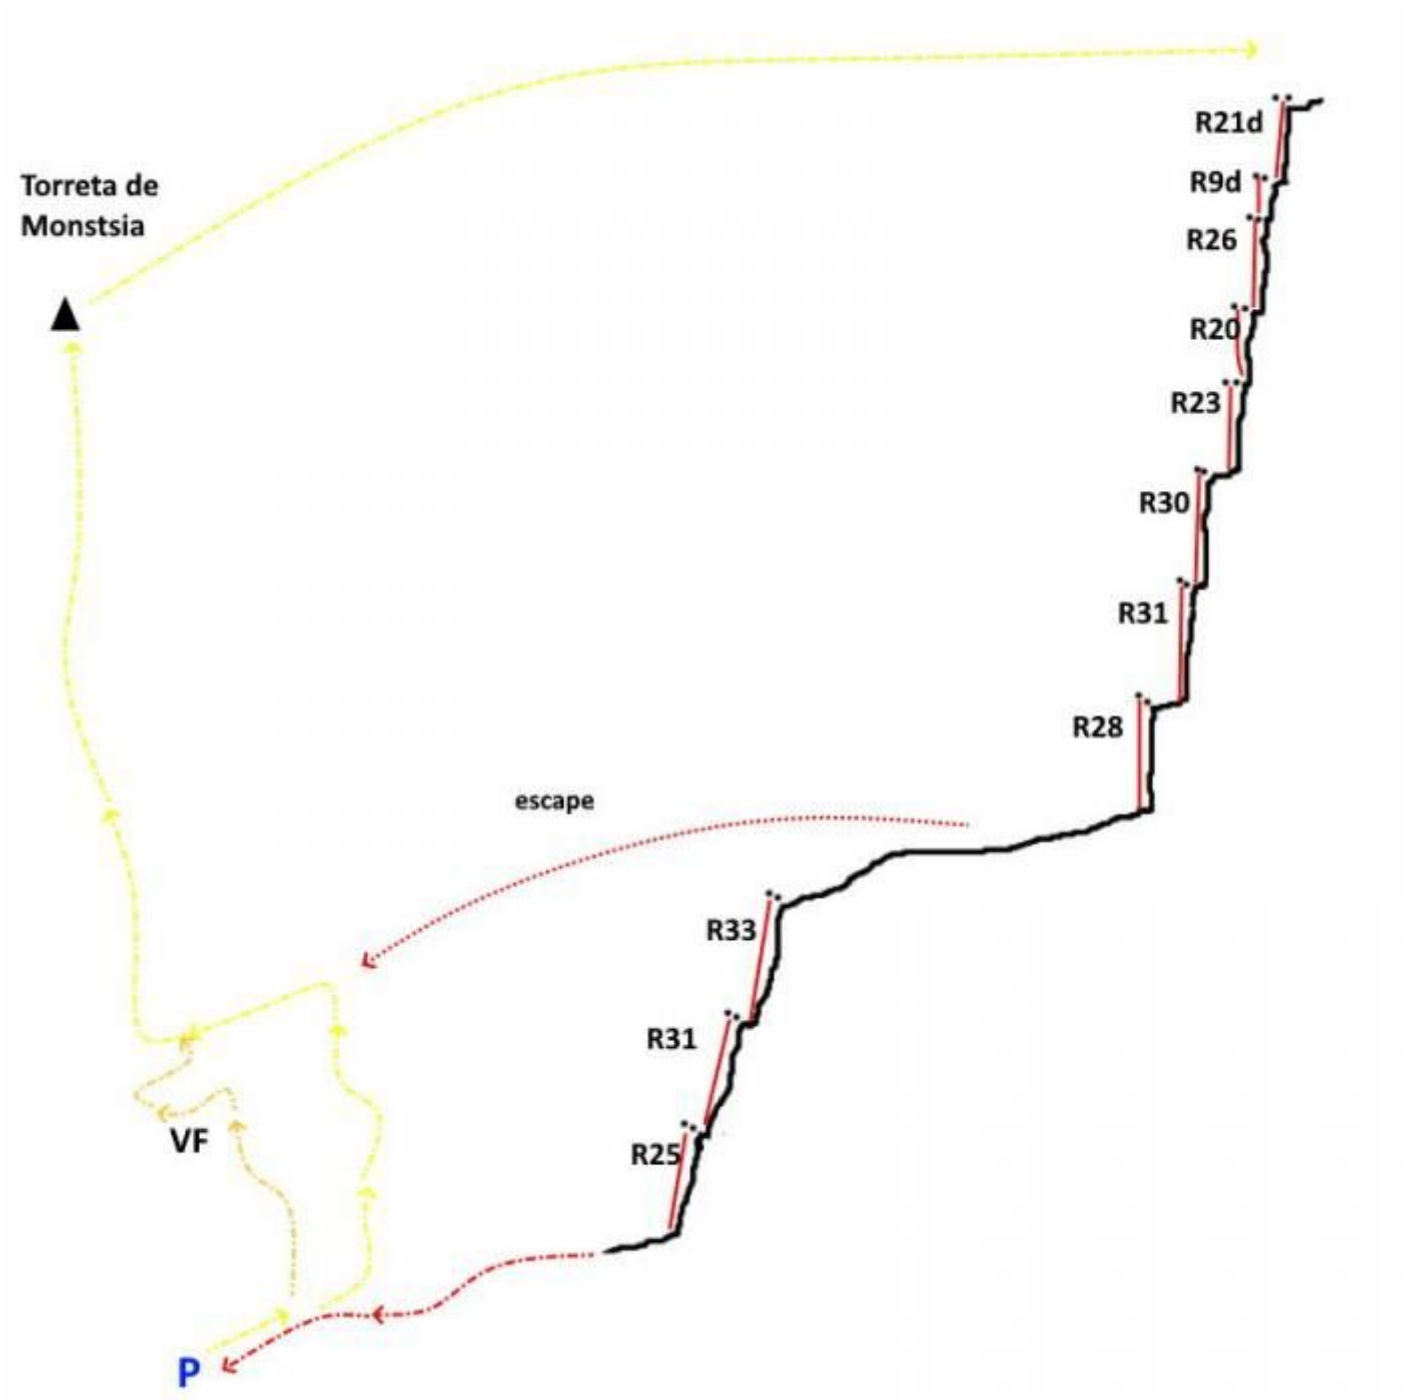

Tour: (machine translated)
A first wall to descend, with some gathering of only 2-3 people until a path. We take the path for 200-300m to the next ridge that we take to the left to reach another wall with 3 more rappels.

Return: (machine translated)
We will try to follow a kind of marked trail that leads us to the access track. You can't get lost because it is only down next to the dry torrent.
