Summary: (machine translated)
Also known as Cascadas de L'Escuciarréu. They are beautiful waterfalls that save more than 100m of slope in 4 rappels to make a dizzying and very entertaining descent after rains. In summer it can almost dry out and lose some interest. An access not too long if we make combination of cars and a very short return.

Hydrology: (machine translated)
In R7. Between R1 and R4 impossible

Access: (machine translated)
On the road up to the San Isidro pass AS253 / AS112
At the height of Felechosa we leave the road and get into the village. We will look for the road that runs parallel to the river towards the fish farms. Before reaching them the track turns north to get into the valley of the Cuervo stream. When the track turns left to leave the stream to one side, in the next left turn crosses our stream, we will have in the background the walls of Escuciarreu. We park the first car.
If we have two cars continue to access the track to the pass of Monte Cebarón, park next to the fountain.

Approach: (machine translated)
With a car we will go up the track to the fountain.
From the fountain we leave to the right by the path that goes east towards the walls of the waterfall. Along this path we will go uphill until we pass over these walls. Here we will see that the path is carved into the rock and a path to the right that leads to the stream, we will take it to cross a fence and enter the height of some beech trees.
If we pass this point, later the path goes down to the stream so we would walk a while longer along the riverbed.

Tour: (machine translated)
A first vertiginous and technical part in which we will descend the waterfall in 4 rappels. Be careful that the rock is slippery if it is wet, especially in the second rappel, which is very exposed.
Then the descent loses some intensity as the rappels are shorter and more spaced out.

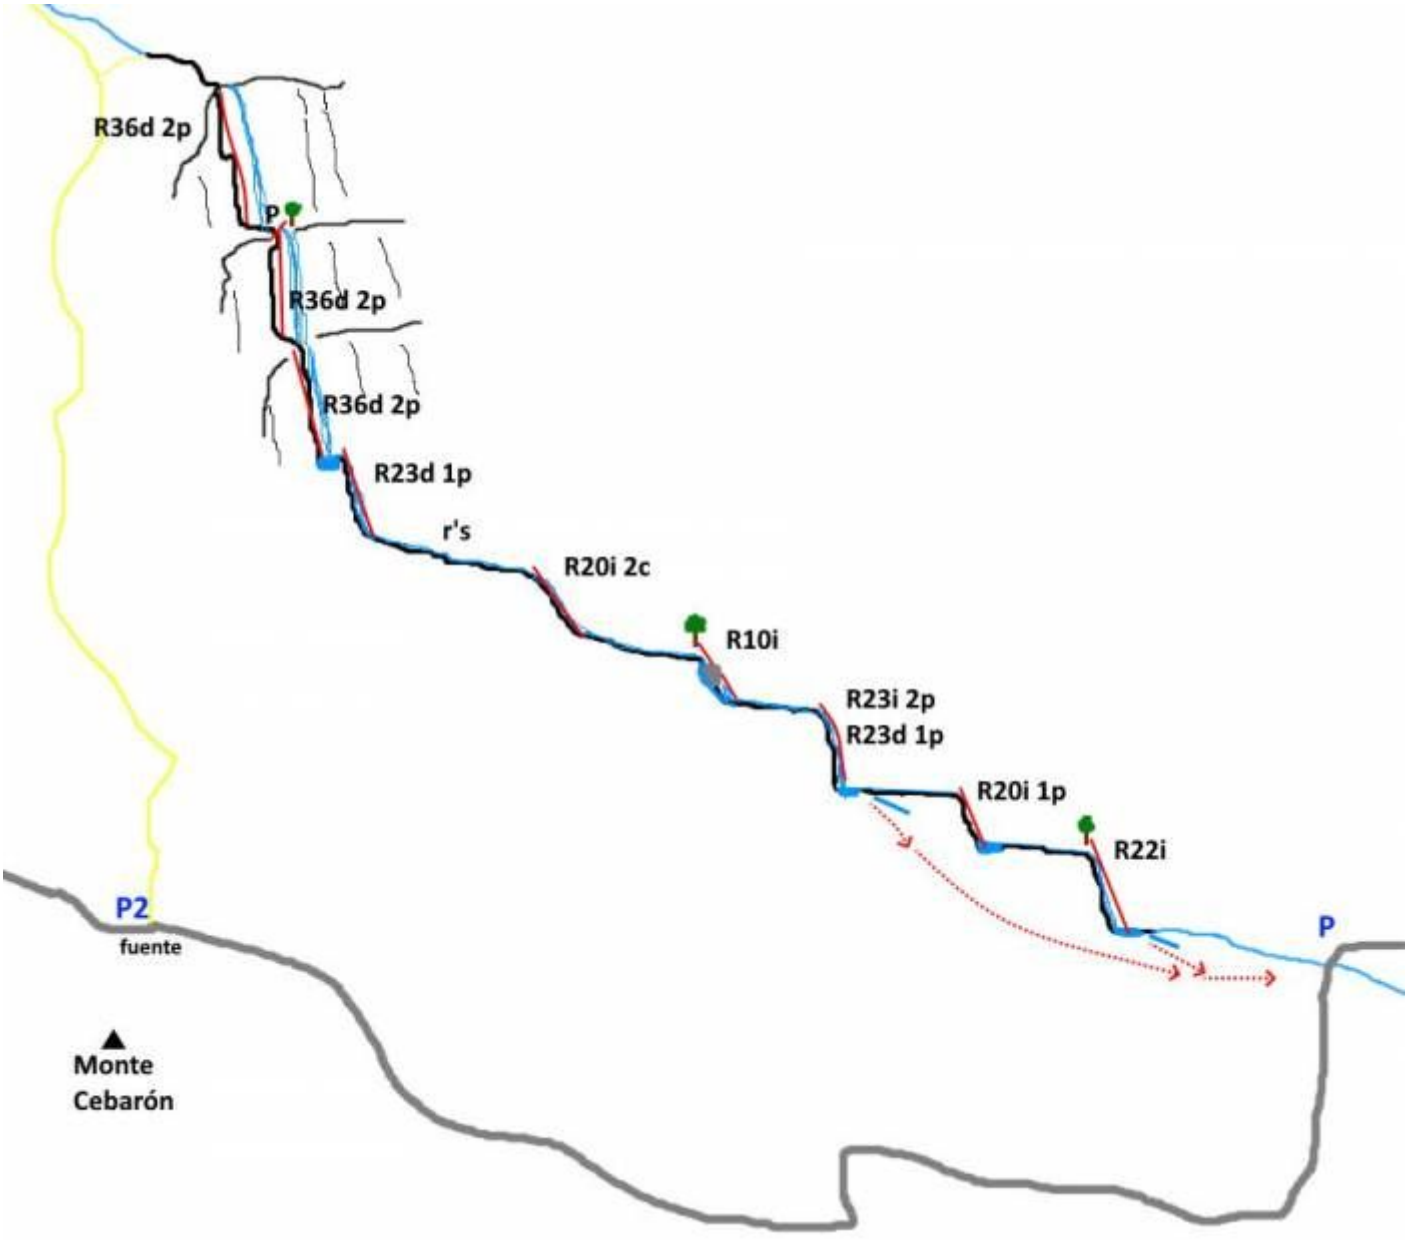

Return: (machine translated)
We can leave after R7 by the canalization path or further on after R9 by another canalization. In both cases we will take a path that leaves us at the lower parking lot.
