Summary: (machine translated)
Also known as Unyola, it is a short but quite technical and very interesting canyon. Its high flow almost all year round forces us to evaluate it very well before entering because after the first rappel there is no way back and the third rappel is very difficult.
At the beginning of the season it may be necessary to re-equip for having jumped over the sheets in the spring floods. Better to be done at the end of summer.

Hydrology:
Imposibles

Access: (machine translated)
There are several ways to get to Salardú.
From the Val d'Aran by the N230, or from France by the N125 to Vielha and go up to the Bonaigua.
From the Sort side crossing the Port de la Bonaigua.
Once in Salardú turn towards Bagergue. We will arrive at this pretty village, cross it and continue along the track next to the river Unhola, when it forks to go to the Borda Lana (left) we will go right along the track of Liat. We will see a dam on our left and the Maupás ravine.
We can park here which is the exit of the ravine or further on in the Arriu Tèrra de Panau which is the access, it is 200m of track.

Approach: (machine translated)
From the Arriu Tèrra de Panau is direct, down to the river.

Tour: (machine translated)
Evaluate the flow very well before doing the entrance R20 because there are no loopholes.
See review, 4 rappels, a couple of skills and it ends before the dam.

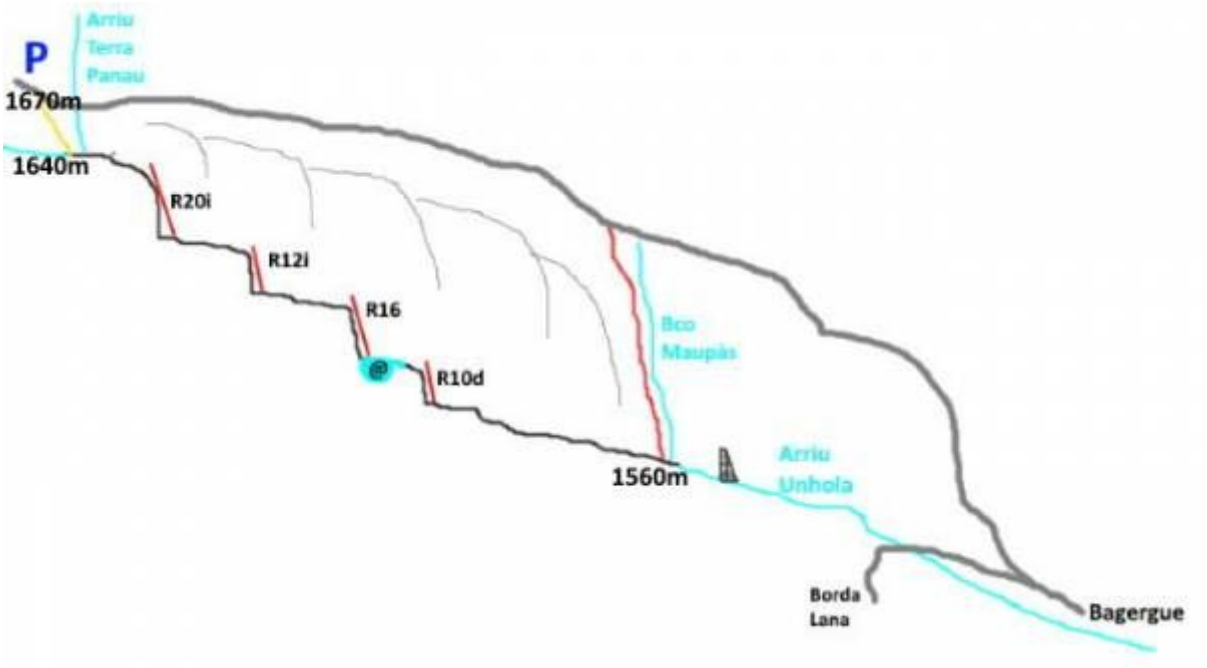

Return: (machine translated)
We leave by the Maupas ravine, on its orographic right side.
