In the 2nd part attractive canyon, in the 1st part mainly river walk, water turbid

Hydrology:

Access: (machine translated)
See Google aerial photo in "Photo gallery

Approach: (machine translated)
From the chapel we go back to the slope and turn right. After about 1.3 km, we take a slight left turn - Steinmann ! _ down to the right on a clear track to reach the streambed. See also map sketch and aerial photo in "Photo gallery"

Tour: (machine translated)
Initially descent in blocked terrain, later - with increasing notches - in natural rock. Slides and jumps possible (after prior inspection). See videos

Return: (machine translated)
At the widening, where the bottom of the canyon is flat, turn right onto the path that provides access to the next part of the canyon. This takes us up to the chapel of Agios Loukas, where our car is parked.\nhttps://de.wikiloc.com/routen-spazieren/pharaggi-ag-louka-korinthias-19371319

A lot of bush-wacking at the start, it only gets nice towards the very end of this canyon, and the start of Kalithea. Super slimy sediment, which instantly clouds all the pools as soon as you step in it. The end is worth it though, but only if you continue into Kalithea. On it's own, not so much..

As the canyon becomes more and more beautiful, you can do it before Kalithea. (machine translated)

Many jumps covered with gravel. Plenty of anchors. The beginning is ok, but it increases from minute to minute. (machine translated)
