Specialities:

Gear:

Summary: (machine translated)
Spectacular canyon with water, with a final vertical, split of 135m. Long and hard accesses and returns, the access always cross-country and the return through the reservoir or going up again to the access point. With good flow we will enjoy several slides and possible jumps.
Only for people with experience.

Hydrology: (machine translated)
Not simple

Access: (machine translated)
By the GC210 to the area of the reservoirs.
With the access vehicle we will go to p.k. 22 to the detour GC606 to El Carrizal. 22 to the detour of the GC606 to El Carrizal, we will take this road, go up and after 2km we have a left curve and a track on the right over the Siberio river. We get in here and park.
If we want to combine vehicles it is best to go around the p.k. 26 of the GC210 under the Siberio dam and park at the exit of the track on the way back.

Approach: (machine translated)
From the track where we parked there is a very direct path that leads us down to the Siberio river, when we reach it we will follow it for a little over 1 km until we see on our left a gully, with a practically lost path to climb to the hill where the house of Juan Mateo is, from here we change waters and down south we enter our ravine.

Tour:
Ver topo

Return: (machine translated)
Two options, both complicated:
Crossing the reservoir to go to the dam and then down to the road where we have to have left a vehicle.
When we arrive at the reservoir, we go to the right along the Siberio river to find the access path through which we cross the reservoir.
