Specialities:

Gear:

Summary: (machine translated)
Dry canyon except for heavy rains, with some residual pools at the end. Quite simple, it is very open and with escapes so it can be used for initiation, with caution given the height of several rappels.

Hydrology: (machine translated)
The descent is quite wide and you can look for it on the left slope.

Access: (machine translated)
We must get to Canillas del Aceituno. From the A45 in Casabermeja take the A356. Or by the A7 also A356 Velez-Malaga. On both sides we must get to pk39 and turn off to Canillas de Aceituno. Arriving at the village at the traffic circle we take a small road to the left towards "Cueva de la Fájara" when we reach the river we look for where to leave the car back.
We go up the road and take the street that goes from the village to the soccer field, where the path that goes up to the Maroma begins, here we leave the other car.

Approach: (machine translated)
We follow the path of the Maroma, when we reach the Arroyo Rábita we cross it and continue upwards until we reach the Arroyo las Tejas.

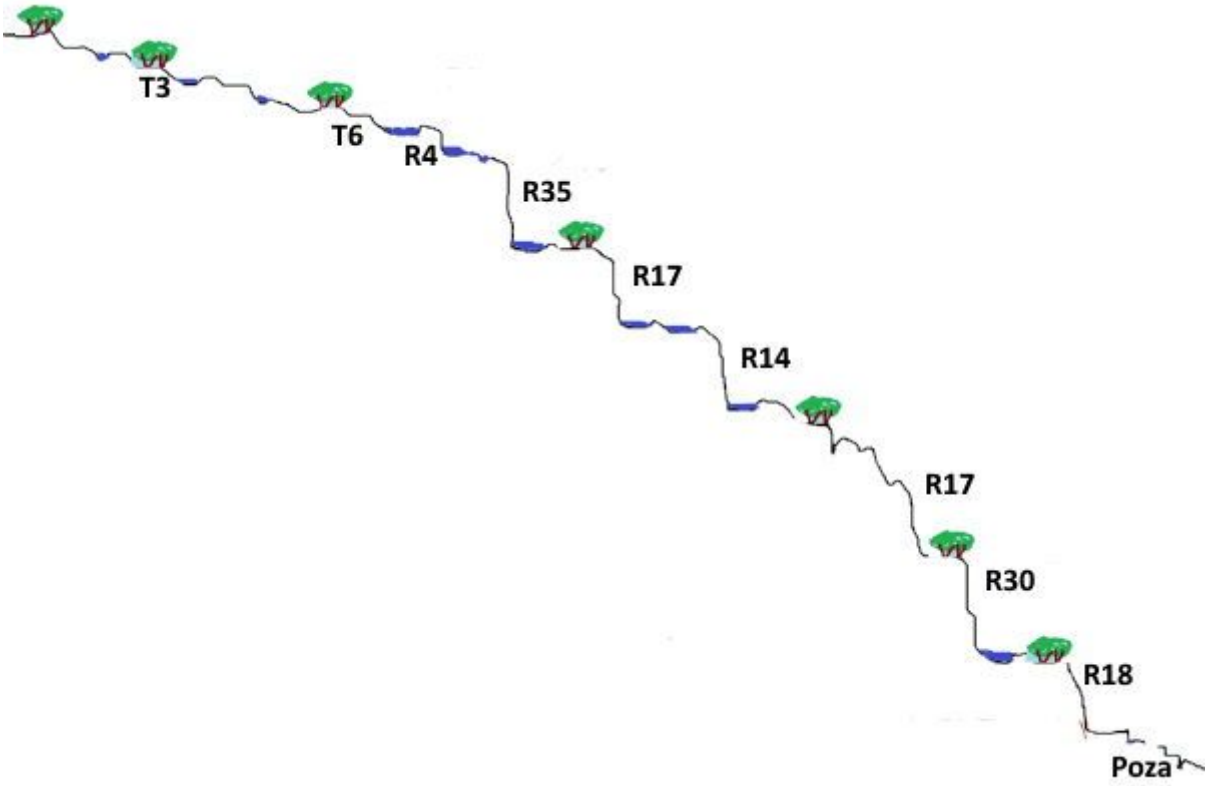

Tour: (machine translated)
Nice descent for its peculiar rappels, the negative point is that it is almost impossible to find the ravine with water. At the end there are some pools that are usually full of dirty water.

Return: (machine translated)
We follow the irrigation ditch from the Fuente de la Fájara to the access road.
