Summary: (machine translated)

Nice ravine that ends in the impressive 65m waterfall without fractionation. The access, although short, is not too clear, there is no trail at the end.

Hydrology: (machine translated)

On the left, in the areas where possible, there are ropes to get out more easily and reach the way up.

Access: (machine translated)

We must go towards the ski resort of Gourette. To do this, if we go through the Portalet, we will continue on the D934 to Laruns. If we go from Pau, we will take the N134 and in Gan the D934.

In Laruns we turn to Eaux-Bonnes on the D918 and continue towards Gourette, we pass the Chalet CASPA and 100m ahead there is room on the right to park.

Approach: (machine translated)

We go back about 50m and a path to the right takes us uphill towards the Cely, leaving aside the waterfall and going uphill until about 1200m closer to the river and we see the access point.

Tour: (machine translated)

Entertaining descent that culminates in the great "Cascade du Serpent" of 65m.

Return: (machine translated)

After the waterfall we continue through some forest ledges and exit to the left to the road.

Extremely many brakes on the access. The canyon positively surprised us in the gray drizzle. We only had 1h30 for the canyon. (machine translated)
