Specialities:

Gear:

Summary: (machine translated)
Long canyon, physical, hard, almost unmanageable in one day, very slippery and impressive. Three parts that could be 3 hard canyons by themselves, with more than 50 rappels and a very long approach.

Hydrology: (machine translated)
At the beginning/end of each section. In the second section there are many open areas to be able to exit to the right to the uphill path. The third section is more difficult.

Access: (machine translated)
We must get to the town of Etsaut.
We have two possibilities and for both we have to go towards Lescun. By the N134 after passing the Somport pass or from Pau.
From Somport we will pass Urdos and the next village is Etsaut.
From Pau we will go up the N134, we will pass the Lescun detour and soon we arrive.
In Etsaut we leave the car to return and take a street that comes out of the back of the village, next to the river and go up as far as we can.

Approach: (machine translated)
By the track / path that leaves from the top we will go up to the hut of Yese (we follow some white and yellow marks). When we arrive at the pont de Moulette we can enter the lower part.
If we follow the path up to a height of 1500 where we cross the shore, this is the access to the intermediate part.
A few meters further up (at 1650m) we have the Yese hut with its friendly shepherds who can offer us a coffee and we continue to the Pas d'Outasse now without a well-defined path to the head of the stream where the upper part begins.

Tour: (machine translated)
First stretch very alpine, facilities in some cases precarious, with a generally low flow.
Second very long section with more flow.
Third stretch is the most difficult, do it only if you are not strong.

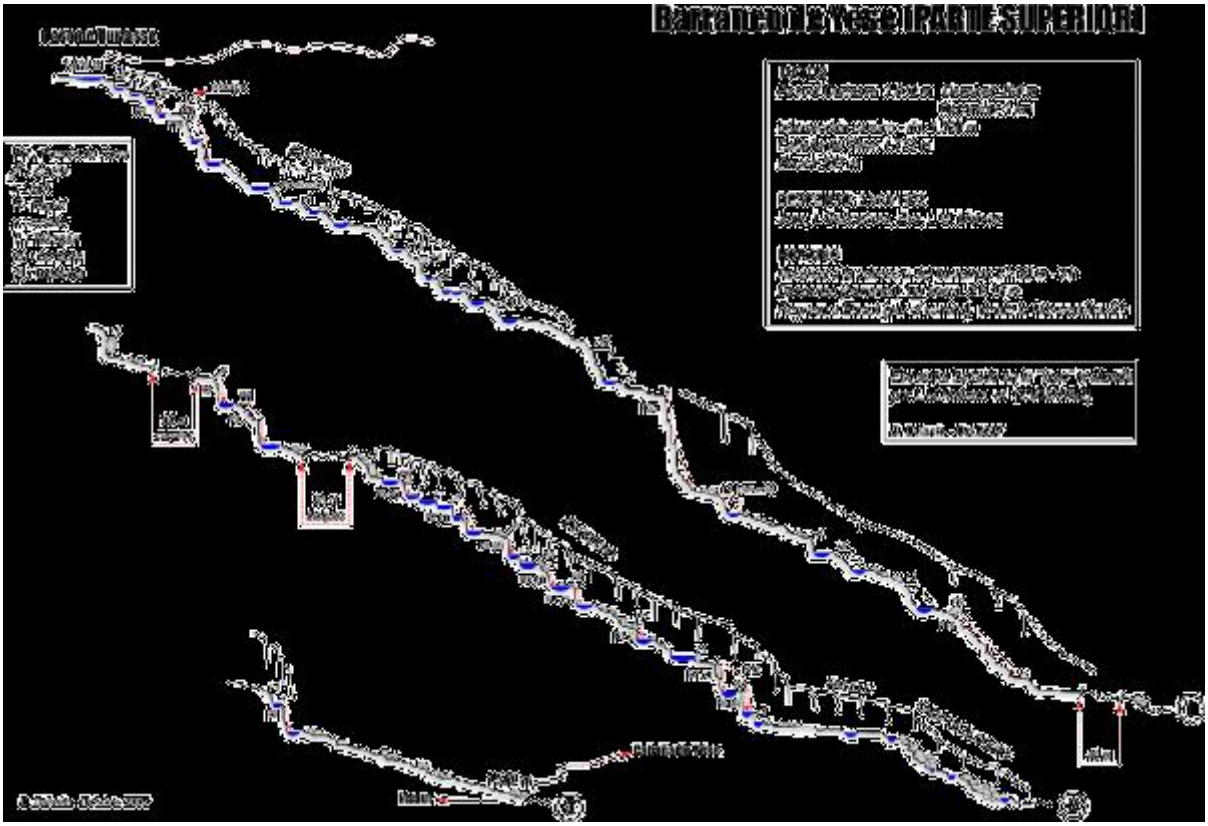

Return: (machine translated)
We arrive almost to the village, we will see a path that takes us to the village. We can also leave at the bridge and leave the last part undone.
