Specialities:

Gear:

Summary: (machine translated)
This canyon is generally dry except during the rainy season. It consists of 12-13 rappels, several of which can be climbed. Magnificent environment but access and returns are quite hard.

Hydrology: (machine translated)
The descent is quite steep, so there are no clear escapes.

Access: (machine translated)
On the road that goes from Ronda to San Pedro de Alcántara the A397, at the height of the pk 13.7 we have the detour to Los Quejigales and Sierra de las Nieves.
We continue along the track, taking the detour to Tolox and Pinsapo de la Escalereta. Here we can leave a P1 car.
If we continue we reach the other side of the ravine and in a left curve, from which you can see the beginning of the ravine below, we can leave the access car P2.
Continuing along the track and a couple of kms ahead we turn right onto the path of the Vereda de la Cruz until we reach the bottom of the valley P3.

Approach: (machine translated)
With only one stop we can leave it at P3, we take the route up to the Pinsapo de la Escalereta but before the middle of the climb, we cross the fence that we took to the right and take a small path that goes flat and then down slightly.
From P1 along the path of the Pinsapo and when we reach a dry stream we go down it.
From P2 it is a descent through the middle of the slope but less steep than P1.

Tour: (machine translated)
Simple descent but quite interesting if the canyon has water in it.

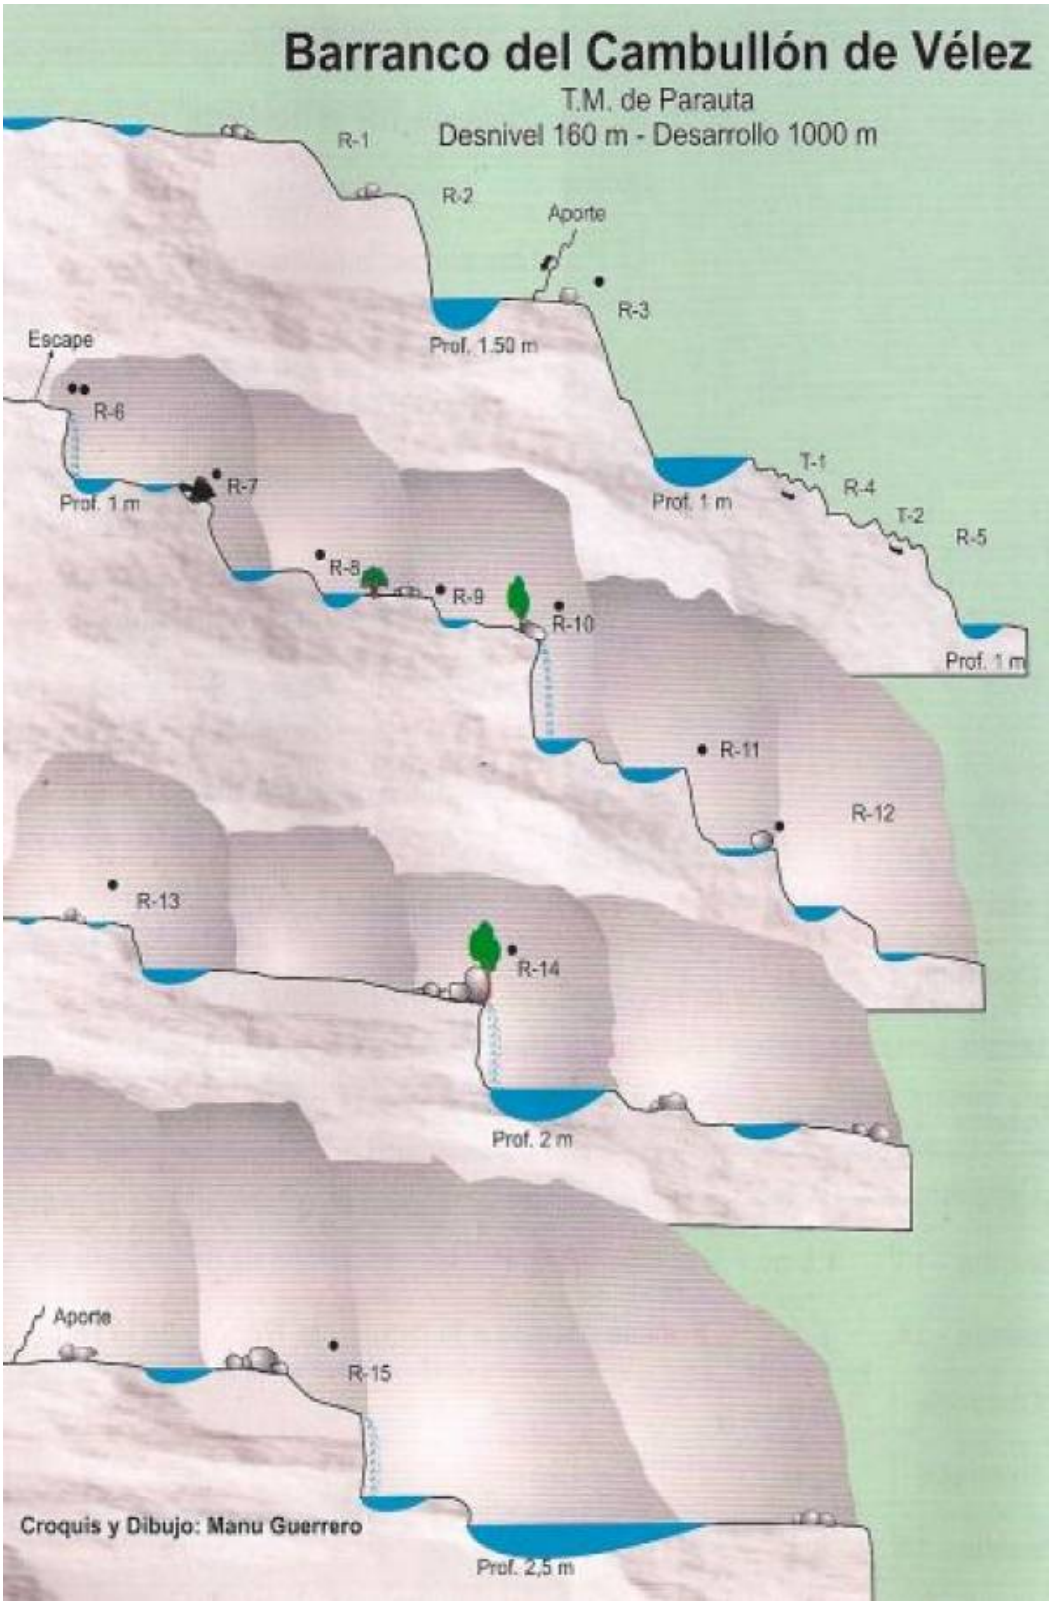

Return: (machine translated)
If we leave at P3 we will follow the river to the right until we find a path that leads us.
If we go out to P1 we will have to go up the Sinsapo path.
