Specialities:

Gear:

Summary: (machine translated)
Generally dry canyon, in the rainy season it will always have at least a trickle of water. It has a beautiful natural bridge and the imposing R45 where we will have to be careful with the rubbing of ropes.

Hydrology: (machine translated)
Possible but difficult

Access: (machine translated)
We must approach to Beceite by the A-2412.
Cross the village looking for the signs to Parrissal and continue along the road/track for 3 kms. Here there is a track on the right that crosses the river, which we will follow until we reach Mas de Formenta (a flat area with a pond and a hut on the left). We will see a track in worse condition that comes out on the left, we will go along it crossing the stream several times until it ends. There is a small esplanade where you can park

Approach: (machine translated)
There are two ways, the wikiloc track takes you on one side and here we will describe the "normal" path.
Where the track ends there is a path to the right that climbs up the slope to, through the forest, reach the mountain edge. The trail continues to climb leaving both sides of the mountain until about 1000m where it softens and turns to the left to go around the cirque. We will arrive at one of the arms of the stream that will put us in the riverbed.

Tour: (machine translated)
The first part of the route is made up of some climbing and some avoidable abseiling to reach the cirque with its natural arch and 45m waterfall.

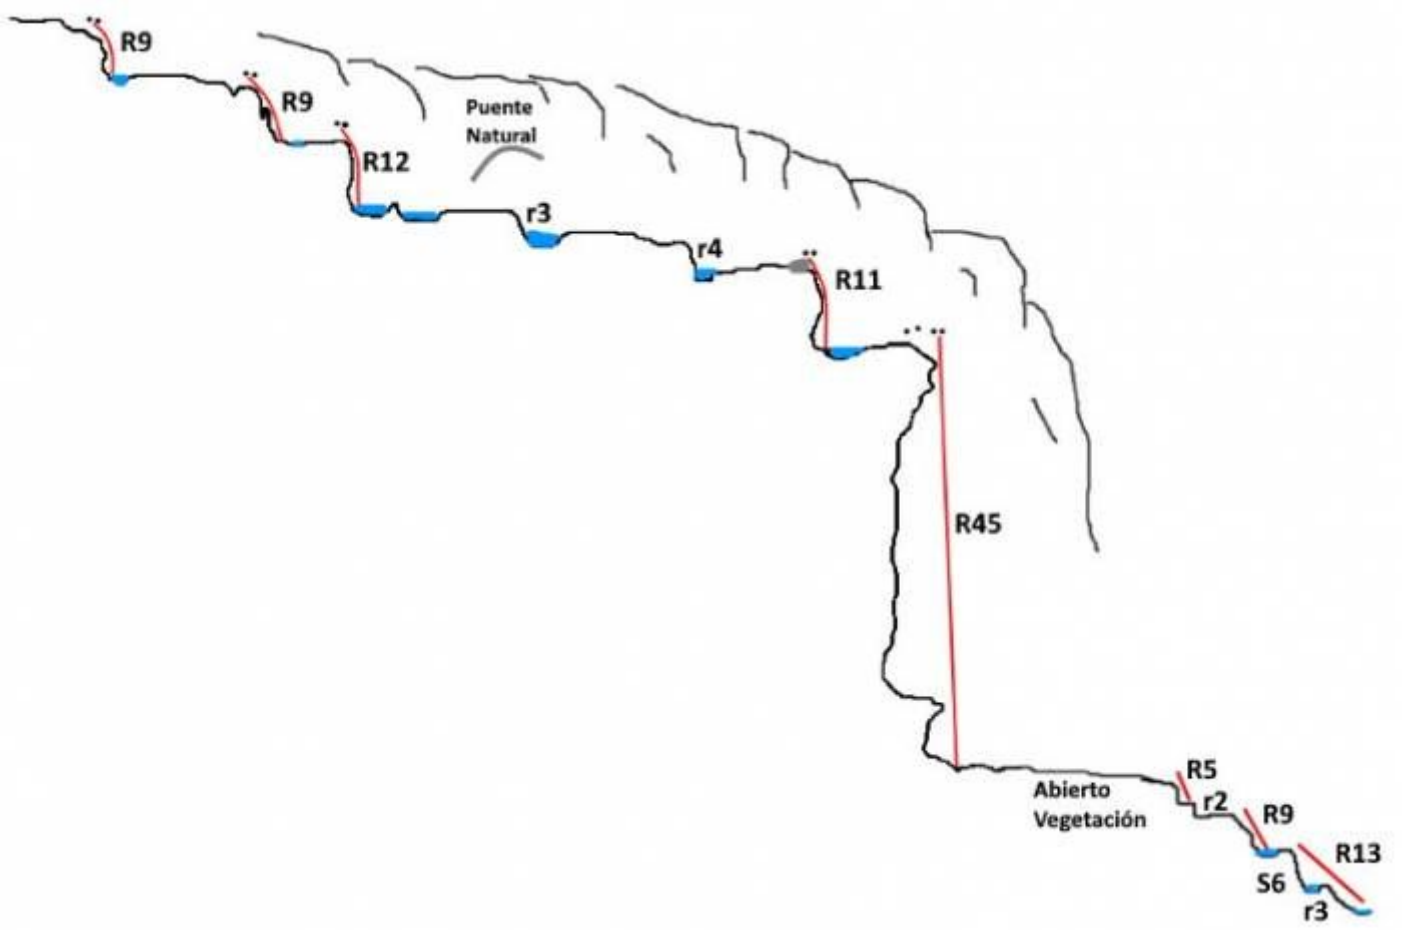

Return: (machine translated)
Once downstream, we will follow the riverbed until we see the path to return almost immediately to the car.
