Summary: (machine translated)
Named after the Mas de Mariné, from which it is accessed. It is a dry canyon except after rains, with two rappels of 45 and 32m.

Hydrology: (machine translated)
After the upwelling on the left and after the 45m abseil on the left to the road to Bel

Access: (machine translated)
We will be located in Rossell
Once there we will take the CV104 to Bel and just before entering the village there is a right turn with a track on the left. We take it and go down to the end. We park the access car if we have two cars.
From Rosell we leave by the CV111 towards Villabona, the road is approaching the Cervol River, about 10kms the road makes a sharp left turn to cross the ravine of the Borja, here we leave the car back or if we only have one car.

Approach: (machine translated)
From Bel we only have to go down to the riverbed.
From the Borja ravine, we go back a little in search of the old road from Bel to Villabona that goes up through the forest, it is marked with milestones. When overcoming the walls we will have the entrance to the ravine to the left by stony area.

Tour: (machine translated)
Interesting descent to be able to take it with some water. It has two very interesting rappels

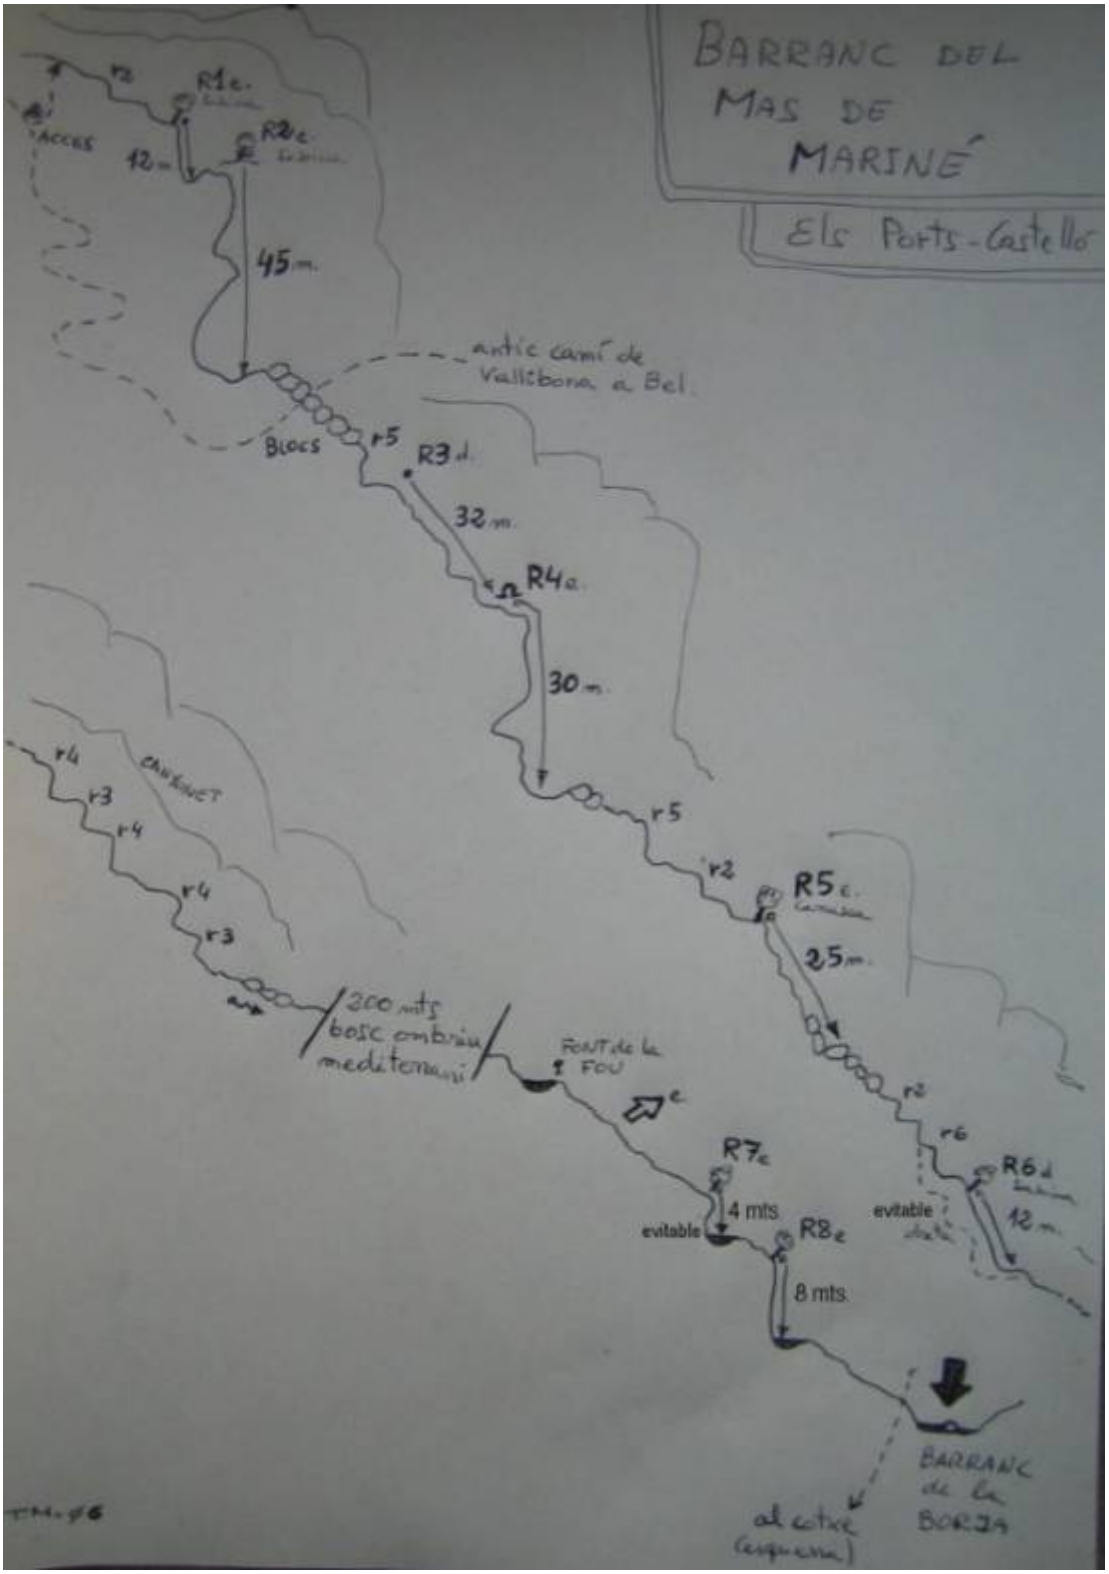

Return:
Inmediato
