Summary: (machine translated) Beautiful canyon with some jumps and slides. Is virtually a beginner tour in this region.
Hydrology:
Access: (machine translated) Claut - Lesis. Shortly after Lesis you come to a bridge over the Cellina. After that parking
Approach: (machine translated) Follow path 391, which soon leads to an alpine meadow with several buildings. Immediately at the first building turn left (marking and path difficult to see) and climb left to the edge of the forest. Then on a beautiful path in many hairpin bends steeply uphill. When the path flattens out again, after crossing a mostly dry streambed, an unmarked path branches off to the left - this path first leads to the ruins of an old material cableway, then steeply down to the streambed of the Ciol della Val, which you reach 2 rappels before it flows into the Ciolesan. This access "saves" the 4 not very interesting rappels of the upper Ciol della Val, the required rope is then also reduced to 1x 40m: those who want to walk the stream from the top simply follow the marked path until it meets the Ciol della Val.
Tour: (machine translated) First sunny, open canyon, then from the tributary of the Ciolesan narrow and more spectacular. Some very tight rappel.
Return: (machine translated) As the streambed opens up, you will see a water line stretched across the canyon. Exit here to the left and follow the water pipe along a clear path that leads back to the parking lot

There are much nicer canyons in the area. We had very cloudy water, which only made many jumps/slides possible after checking it out (machine translated)

The ascent is a bit tedious, but the canyon is very well set up, beautiful and not too difficult. We had little water (see picture of the entrance pool). (machine translated)

We started in the middle of the day. It was a nice tour with many shorter rappels. Water level according to the reference photo did not cause any problems in the narrow sections, should still be possible with a slightly higher water level. Be careful at the beginning at the first house to the left up into the forest (GPS was helpful). (machine translated)

Some anchor points are worse, but all in all doable. Everything was good ♥

Quite a few screws have been removed since my last visit, but the equipment is still adequate. There is freshly fallen wood, but it's not a problem. Otherwise in nice condition. (machine translated)
