Raineach Canyon is a small, short canyon on the south side of Loch Tummel. It is fed by the Faragon Ridge and a small catchment area, which means it is often low on water. What it lacks in jumps and slides, it makes up for with an abundance of fun and often watery abseils. It is very well equipped and many pitches have anchors on both sides. The reason for this is that it is used as a training ground for canyoning companies. For this reason, it is ideal for practising rope techniques... (machine translated)
